The Philippine-American War was a conflict that took place between the United States and the Philippines. It began in 1899 and ended in 1902. The war was fought between the United States, represented by President William McKinley, and the Philippine nationalist movement, represented by President Emilio Aguinaldo. The war was fought on the island of Luzon and resulted in the United States gaining control of the Philippines. The war is often referred to as the "Philippine-American War" or the "War of Philippine Independence." The war ended with the Treaty of Paris in 1902, which officially recognized American sovereignty over the Philippines.

In addition to the military events of the war, the Philippine-American War had significant political implications. It marked the end of the Spanish colonial period in the Philippines and the beginning of American imperial control. The war also had a profound impact on American foreign policy and relations with other countries in the region. It is a fascinating story that continues to be studied and debated by historians today.
